

Your people need more time for the work that needs them.

Your team has people to support, volunteers to coordinate and services to deliver. I help find where the work gets stuck and stay involved in making it easier.

— The reason people call

This sounds familiar if...

- A report means collecting the same information from several spreadsheets.
- Registrations, volunteers or requests move between systems by hand.
- A vendor proposal needs someone on your side who can assess and manage the work.

— How this works

Understand it. Improve it. Stay involved.

We map the work, choose what matters most, and make improvements people can feel in their day. I build, coordinate vendors, and stay involved as your needs change.

An agreed bank of hours based on your needs, usually within a year-long engagement aligned with the nonprofit's planning cycle. We agree on scope, availability and response times before starting.

Map the work together

Start with what happens in a normal week.

We talk to leadership and staff, look at the systems and handoffs, and choose the first improvements together. This gives the ongoing work a clear starting point.

What you get back

A process and gap map, grounded in conversations and observed work.

Priorities agreed with your internal lead, including quick improvements and deeper work.

An incremental plan with a baseline, a measure of success and clear ownership.

A handover and responsibility map: people, access, instructions and a practical check that someone can use the solution.

*A change has to work for the people using it.
Their concerns are part of the work.*
